Is there something lacking in your Bible class? Is it as engaging or convicting as it could be? Do you find yourself attending Bible class out of habit or compulsion, but not much else?

TEACHING ROCKET

Are you a teacher who feels burned out, ill-trained, or unqualified? Is it tough putting together a lesson each week? Are you frustrated by a lack of discussion or engagement from your students?

On September 29-30, I'm excited to be at Puyallup for TEACHING ROCKET, a training seminar for those who want to be a better Bible teacher or student. Our first session will explore the goals of a good Bible class program. Why exactly do we come together for Bible study on Sunday morning/Wednesday night? What are we trying to accomplish? A healthy Bible class program needs clearly defined goals, and we'll talk about what those should be.

In the other sessions, we'll explore how to prepare and deliver a Bible lesson. I'll take you through several exercises that will equip you to generate your own lesson material from scratch week in and week out. Finally, we'll wrap up with a discussion on classroom dynamics. I've known a lot of people who were reluctant to teach because the prospect of teaching others intimidated them. How do I connect with my students? How do I ask engaging, thought-provoking questions that spark discussion? How do I handle class disrupters?

If you have no desire to become a class teacher, I want to encourage you to attend anyway. This seminar is for more than teachers; it's great for anyone who wants to be a better Bible student. Much of what we discuss will help you mine the riches of Scripture for yourself. Whether you want to be a better Bible student or teacher, I hope to see you on September 29!
